Five hundred women who have been attending the blennial convention of the General Federation of Women's Clubs went to Tarrytown yesterday on the steamer Commander. They were met at the pier by a committee headed by Miss C. E. Mason and 112 automobiles. The visitors drove through Sleepy Hollow and then fo the William Rockefeller estate, after which they went to the Philipse Manor House.

As they were entering the beautiful estate of John D. Rockefeller Mr. Rockefeller, who was on his links, removed his golf cap and waved a salute. The women were received at the big house by Mr. Mitchell, Mr. Rockefeller's secretary, and by William D. Bosworth, his landscape gardener, who escorted them over the estate. Later they visited the Castle at Miss Mason's School, where they listened to an address by the Rey John Knox Allen. They also went to Christ Church, which Washington Irving attended.

The visitors were entertained at The Lyndhurst, the hore.

Charles Grob, manager of the club-centry, in convention assembled, like the conscientious beings they are, have been attending meetings and conferences and councils, three and four a day, and all the while growing more and more fired and anxious and worried as they tried to assimilate the culture with which they were filled. For two weeks the local clubwomen and all the best speakers of here and elsewhere have labored vallantly to make them happy, with a very moderate measure of success.

But yesterday the Chamber of Commerce just said to 500 of them:
"Come on up to West Point and see the solder boys. Forget culture and board meetings and such things and board the steamer Albany for a trip up the Hudson. We'll give you the time of your lives."

Did the clubwomen accept? They did, with enthusiasm. Did the Chamber of Commerce make good its promise? It did. These women forgot biennial problems and tiffs and enjoyed themselves with a wholeheartedness and simplicity that made the New Yorkers who went along realize how blase and cynical New York is.

Grayhaired clubwomen from Oregon and Kentucky tangoed in the lower saloen with the abandon of girls. Delegates from Texas and California gossipped about their grandchildren and their gardens as if they'd known each other all their lives. They ate sand-wheels and fee cream, they exclaimed with wonder at the hills and Palisades and the estates along the way, and when they got to West Point and saw the eastes along the way, and when they got to West Point and saw the eaded drill they gave "those nice boys" an evation which must have made the badding defenders of their country feel that they are those nice boys and evation which must have made the badding defenders of their country feel that they are those nice boys and the states along the way, and when they got to West Point and saw the eaded drill they gave "those nice boys" an evatio
